The First Muster

The photogravure shown on the front cover is a scene of that part of Boston Common not far from the present playground near Charles Street where the annual Muster has been held each year, and looking up towards the Heights of Beacon Hill, where the pole with its firepot beacon stood.

Governor Winthrop, clad in puritanical black and ruff is inspecting the Company, followed by Rev. John Cotton and military members of the Governor's Council. The stalwart figure in the foreground is Robert Keayne, the Company's first Commander.

The original painting by Fred Russell Bates was presented to the Company by Comrade Frank W. Whitcher and now adorns the center of our armory.
